Any science course or health and family education material is to be presented and introduced in such a way that permits either the student or his parent/guardian to opt the student out of the program for those sections dealing with human reproduction and/or sexual behavior. A student who has opted out of a specific program or portion thereof will be assigned study in a related area but of a nature less sensitive and therefore acceptable in the opinion of the student and/or his parent(s) or guardian(s).

A teacher must take care, when discussing political or religious matters, or other potentially sensitive or controversial issues, not to enforce his views upon his students.
